Islet growth occurs by two pathways: (a) the expansion by replication of preexisting  $\beta$  cells and (b) the formation of new islets (neogenesis) by proliferation and subsequent differentiation of pancreatic ductal epithelium. Some of the factors involved in these pathways of islet growth have been defined.

BRIEF REVIEWS Islet Cell Growth and the Growth Factors Involved Susan Bonner-Weir and Fannie E. Smith Throughout development, growth and aging, the mass of the pancreatic islets, in particular the insulin producing cell, increases to meet the functional demand and maintain euglycemia.

Although fibroblast growth factor and the pancreatic homeodomain transcription factor PDX-1 have been implicated in  $\beta$ -cell growth, they are likely involved in terminal differentiation and maturation of  $\beta$ -cells. However, it is possible that they act in concert with the insulin resistance-induced islet growth factor.

The growth factors may also be administered to subjects with type 1 diabetes to stimulate the proliferation and differentiation of pancreatic cells into insulin-secreting cells. The present invention also provides modulators of growth factor-mediated pancreatic cell differentiation. ... Pancreatic islet cell growth factors Download PDF Info

Chapter 32 | Islet Growth Factors 563 tion (14,15). Understandably, therefore, loss of Rb results in activation of the cell cycle in many cell types, and homozygous loss at this locus in humans is associated with familial retinoblastoma. Homozygous loss of Rb in knockout mice is lethal early in embryonic life.
